I am informed that prior to his resignation Mr. Grimes, as Counsel to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, would present a subject for investigation, but when asked to produce the leads and information which would justify the investigation he usually suggested another investigation. Finally, he boiled these down to three in number. These were to include an investigation concerning the orders about bombing at the Yalu River, the Morgenthau diaries, and something to do with atomic energy. These did not appear particularly appealing to the Committee, particularly when faced with the expanded staff which Grimes desired, and his resignation was accepted.
